A View of Norway

Comparison of the Past and Present

Norway has more than twenty good sized hills. North of Norway, through Greenwood, Bethel, Newry, Gratton to the lake region are high mountains with bald, rugged sides, devoid of vegetation, but Norway's hills are more or less cleared and cultivated to the summits. These hills are mostly in northern and western parts of the town and are named for persons who settled upon them or nearby, among them, Holt Hill, Pike Hill, Frost Hill, Horse Hill, Legal Hill, etc.

The views from some of these elevations especially Pike Hill are varied and beautiful with the lesser rolling hills, valleys, lakes, streams and the mountains in the distance. It was on Pike Hill where in the early days Henry Rust, the proprietor of Rustfield erected a house where he spent several summers, though he never became a permanent resident of the town.

History says: "There are several ponds in Norway, the largest of which is the great Pannesseewassee, which would be called a lake. This pond extends from a mile south of Noble's Corner to within less than half a mile of Norway Village and is nearly five miles in length by from half to three-fourths of a mile in width."

After many years the pond referred to has complied with the suggestion and the pond has become known far and wide in these days as Lake Pannesseewassee, where more than a hundred summer cottages have been built and becomes a real summer resort from the latter part of May to the first of October.

The cottages are owned by people from many of the different states from here to Pennsylvania, and are in constant use during the summer season.

Lake Pannesseewassee receives its water from several streams that come down from Greenwood the overflow of North Pond, which is situated about a mile east of the head of the lake and that from the south Pannesseewassee which is situated something more than a mile west of the center of the lake, now as formerly spoken of as Little Pannesseewassee and also known as Hobbs' Pond.

Furlong's Pond is situated partly in Norway, Greenwood and Albany, the northeast corner of the Waterford three tiers being within this pond. Its outlet flows diagonally across the Waterford three tiers and discharges into Crooked River. The brook passing through Swift Corner comes from the southwest corner of Greenwood, flows longwise to the first Cummings Purchase, forming a small pond near Swift's Corner and flows into Crooked River which forms a boundary line of the town. Mul Pond and Sand Pond are situated in the south, early part of the town of the Waterford three tiers. Round Pond runs into Mul Pond and Mul into Sand Pond and then runs southerly through Everett Brook through the Gore into Otisfield and finally into Thompson Pond in Oxford.

The flow of water in nearly all the smaller streams is much less than it was before the land was cleared and some of the streams have become mere threads and in times of drought are completely dry.

Signs of glacial activity are shown throughout the town of Norway by the distribution of boulders and of other drift, at some remote period. The boulders distributed through town are not "in place" as the geological expression is, but were brought here from the far north, frozen in ice-bergs, and dragged from the mountain summits by those moving glaciers, which passed out of the north, centuries ago.

The soil in Norway in many places is rocky and hard to work but once prepared is exceedingly productive. Farming has been the chief employment of the inhabitants of the village in the later years has given employment in woodworking mills, saw mills, shoe factories, novelty mills, stores, etc. along with the farming.

Beavers, otters, moose, deer, sable and other fur-bearing animals all abound here when the settlers first came. The Indians had no regular camping ground within the limits of Norway but they often visited the Great Pond as well as other ponds in Norway and through Norway to Greenwood was one of the Indian trails leading from the seashore to the northern lakes. But the savage red man with the huge moose and timid deer, the treacherous panther and the gaunt wolf have abandoned the region and in place of the dread war whoop and the howl of the wolf are heard the hum of industry, just a little subdued during the changing days of 1933, but there nevertheless, on the hill sides may be heard the "bleating of sheep and the loving herds" interspersed with the whiz and the whir of the automobile.

Pet Critters and Piazzas

From the Goose at Goose Corner

Frye, probably you will say it takes very little to please the Goose, when you read about the fun she has with her critters. One beady-eyed black hen had begged off from imprisonment in the henpen. She preferred the piazza. When the kittens become a little too lively they are thrust out on the piazza. Prudence, the white collie, likes the piazza better than the warm living room.

So the five kittens—Borneo, Cheerio, Smutno, Tunico and Ducco—the black hen, Emma Goldman and Prudence, the dog, amicably share a blanket on the floor. Put out on a piece of bread and the fun begins. Emma snatches it away from the kittens, they are pained but helpless, Prudence grabs it away from Emma, also pained and helpless and kittens and hen watch Prudence bury the bread she seems to eat.

That episode concluded to the satisfaction of nobody but Prudence, the assortment of critters wander back to the blanket where Prudence virtuously resumes her task of de-fecating the kittens and Emma gives a startled cackle or two when the others push her to hard.

At night nobody knows just how Emma sneaks into the calf pen, but with the morning is alert to snatch any snatches from the kittens.

As midnight so to speak, between the kittens and the dog she shivers amazingly. And now the Goose dashes this discourse into print. Friday noon as ever Mr. Goose will mutter, "All this talk about a damper!" And the piazza floor. Well the less said about that floor the better. Emma is a damper.

SUMNER

The writer of these items wishes to correct an error that appeared in the April 31st issue of this paper. When the child that Master Millett, youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Millett, was the proud possessor of a new buck saw frame also a new axe handle, both of which were made by Leonard Bartlett, order of Junior's father, he should have said Master Ralph Millett, instead. The writer regrets such a mistake went through, however, as it does not deprive the child of the title of being the King of all Sumner's lumber jacks of his age.

Wednesday, April 26, it began to rain at ten thirty a. m. and cleared away at 2 p. m. and all the mountains around here were as white with snow as they were in January. The day following, Lann Farrar and the Bartlett boys, Irvin and Jerry who are this season, as for the past two years changing work in doing their farming were hauling out dressing at the Bartlett place, and at nine o'clock a. m. it began to snow just like the cold old winter time, and at 11 p. m. there were two inches of snow on the ground and still snowing so hard that the boys had to give up and put the team in, and it was a two minute heavy roll of thunder.

Vernon Redding carried Benjamin Gerish to Boston, Thursday, the 27th.

Mr. and Mrs. Alpha Varney called upon Mr. and Mrs. Emerson Bartlett, Thursday, the 27th.

Reminds us of old times when at six o'clock, on a Friday morning we saw Charles Bartlett pass along the Green Woods road with his wood choppers out on his way to his wood lot in the green woods. Charles believes in carrying a supply of wood in his hand, and in a heavy snow storm, as it is said he has fitted wood enough from his buildings to keep the home fires going for at least three years with a good bit tired up in the north end of his water shed that has not been disturbed for forty one years when it was tied in the old shed by Charles, when at that time Charles was not called a boy by any means.

Emerson Bartlett and Barge hand some two year old Durham heifer give birth to a nice male calf four weeks ago, they needed the milk and he tried to give the calf away, believe it or not that man wanted to fight.

Walter Burgess went up through here April 27th, on his way to work on the farm this summer for Berton Emery, the Raleigh salesman.

Lionel Bartlett left home the 26th, to stop over night with Charles Starbird of West Sumner, from there in company with Mr. Starbird they took in the Walker field day at South Paris, the 27th.

Omek Farrar substituted for Lell Potland, the 27th, on the school bus and Lell went to the Walker field day.

The Stephens children of West Sumner who live on the former Freeman Farrar farm, were up to the Thompson place, April 29, for sawdust, three of whom were in advance with the famous race horse, Northern Silk, hitched to a light buggy and a little later, a son, who is man grown came along with a pair of horses hitched to a hayrack.

Julian Dyer called on Emerson Bartlett, April 30 and a pleasant chat for nearly an hour followed. One item of which was a twenty-four year old horse, the writer saw ten cords of wood by hand for Julian and his brother, Linn, in exchange for a light harness and two wags.

Julian put in a busy hour morning looking for a good stick of white maple to make a fish pole, then he took it into what was at that time the old school house, he stood at the turn of the road, there he laid a work bench and a kit of tools and tell the boys he knew how to use them. He made a four jointed fish pole that attracted the attention of all fishermen and he tells me that it still remains in the best of shape at this time.

Silas Keniston, foreman of the birch department for the Tabbets Spool Company of Locke's Mills was down to the Tabbets' birch mill here at the Thompson place, May 1. Silas is a live wire in his line, his two little children were with him.

Our road commissioner, John Redding began working on the road May 1, tearing out disabled culverts, blasting a fire in the road leveling up and a few other little jobs that needed attention.

Linn Farrar with his horses, Jerry Bartlett with his shovel, Clifford Abbott, a pick and shovel, and the old reliable Carl Abbott with his pockets full of dynamite.

Donald Varney had a nice two year old heifer break both of her fore legs just above the ankles.
